Route 7 Job Progresses

About 3 per cent of the State ! Highway Department's project to relocate the horseshoe curves at Williamsport has been completed, William P. McKenna, director of Division 11 at New Philaon Route 7 shows two big earthmovers hauling out dirt while in the top background a temporary bridge is being constructed.

The project calls for a new concrete span to replace the present bridge and a 100-foot cut through the hillside.

The center view looks north over the main horseshoe curve and shows the gentle curve the new roadway will follow

The bottom view, looking south from the junction with the Elkton Rd. shows a portion of another hillside being cut away to eliminate another sharp curve. Note the booms of two steam shovels at the top of the hill and the big hauler in the left foreground. The 1.2-mile project, which includes a change in the creek channel, will cost $547,590 and is scheduled to be

This means that a surprise attack now can mounted without previous David Lawrence detection of those measure of mobilization that would precede such an attack and which can be photographed from the air. The U2 planes by their constant surveillance can furnish information that an attack is coming. Why, it is being asked here, should the Soviets be insured against detection? If they were ready to agree to a program that would bind both sides to refrain from reconnaissance, there would be logic in their position but no such proposal has been made by Moscow Indeed, Mr. Khrushchev is mainly concerned now about an extension of our self-imposed ban. He says the present suspension lasts only until a new President of the United States comes into office on Jan. 20 next and he wants pledges beyond that date.

In other words, he wants to make the military disadvantage from

There is a difference between espionage and surveillance. In the latter case the military forces of a nation feel they have a right at a critical time to observe the enemy forces.

Under international law there today technically a condition peace between Russia and the United States but actually there is a cold war and threats of attack have been made repeatedly by the Soviet Premier. So there is every right to make reconnaissance flights as a defense measure.

JUST HOW HIGH above the earth is a flight a mere act of justified observation, as, for instance, with a satellite that carries cameras, and when it is a "spy"

Sen. John Stennis (D-Miss) who is a member of the Senate Committee on Aeronautical and Space Sciences, has just made a speech calling attention to an article written by G. Zadorozhnyi, a Russian expert, in October 1957 for the newspaper Soviet Russia in which he says:

"The artificial satelllite, on the flight around the earth, passes over the territory of practically all countries. According to the provisions

In practice, however, up to now the question of sovereignty over airspace has been concerned only with the lower layers of the atmosphere at distances 12 to 18 miles from the earth within the limits of maximum ascent ceiling of present-day airplanes." But the international agreements do not forbid use of the air by unarmed planes at any height. The United States, therefore can justify its U2 flights because its planes carried no weapons of war and have been in every sense unarmed Are the Russians going to argue that no such planes now can fly over another nation's territory because mere transport of photographic apparatus is a violation of a nation's sovereignty?

If they do, then they, in effect, will be abandoning their own doctrine and saying that their own satelltes hereafter cannot traverse any other nation's air

The opinion of all these (Western) specialist comes to this: That there is nothing in either customary international law or international conventions which would be violated by the program of the international geophysical year."

But how high up is a flight scientific, and how low must it be to be considered military and engaged in spying? The camera knows no altitude limits. The satellites now in orbit have been taking pictures of military installations. If, therefore, reconnaissance flights are to be stopped altogether. it must be by international agree-

Why should the United States suspend U2 flights and give Russia a military advantage?

This question is worrying military men generally but it might well begin to worry everybody else because, for nearly four years, the U2 has protected America against surprise attack.

What will protect America

That's the question involved in the growing demand for a resumption of U2 flights or at least an agreement that will bind the Russians to open inspection so that no

WASHINGTON Thousands of Japanese threaten to demonstrate against President Eisenhower if he goes to Japan June 19. He says he will go. Some members of Congress think he

Why the visit? Why the protest? The visit can be explained first and easiest. The President will leave Sunday on what has been billed as a goodwill visit to a number of Far Eastern countries. including Japan.

Just how much good is done by these goodwill visits by heads of state is questionable. Nevertheless, they have become almost a custom in the past few years. The date of Eisenhower's arrival in Japan has significance. June 19 is the date when Japanese ratification of the new American-Japanese defense treaty goes into effect. It's right on this point-the defense treaty - that the protest demonstration comes into the picture. Its roots go away back After the war this country not only helped the defeated and disarmed Japan get back on its feet economically but started it on a new political course of democratic government. Still, this country kept its troops in Japan as an occupation force.

The solution to our problem is simple. We quit taking weather In 1951 Japan, which still had no defense force of its own, agreed with this country to a defense treaty which many Japanese felt was an insult. They made these complaints:

Men often applaud an imitation, It allowed the United States to keep its forces, number unlimited. in and around Japan indefinitely; did not actually require the United States to defend Japan; it let this country use Japanese bases from which to dispatch troops to any Far East area; it left this country free to introduce any kind of weapons, including nuclear -Mary Baker Eddy ones, into Japan; it gave this country a veto over any Japanese desire to let a third power have bases in Japan; there was no provision in the treaty for ever ending it; and it permitted U.S.

-Samuel Johnson forces to crush internal disorder in Japan, such as a Communist uprising.

Since then this country-because of the peace treaty-has let the Japanese rearm. They have now 165,000 ground troops, 27,000 men in their air force, and 23,000 in the navy. Finally, to satisfy the Japanese. this country agreed to a new defense treaty which was signed Jan. 19, 1960. Under it, the United States no

Tough Decision For Ike

President Eisenhower is on the spot. Should he go to Japan or not?

Wednesday, June 8, 1960

If he goes, it is with the risk that he would be the object of some ugly demonstrations by Japanese leftists who oppose the new treaty with the United States. Although adequate measures could be taken to ocotect him physically, such demonstrations might farnish the glowing image of a man renowned and revered throughout the world.

If he does not go, however, he very definitely would risk a "loss of face" for ducking an unpleasant meeting with a political minority of the opposite camp. In the Oriental mind, this could create a more severe setback for Mr. Eisenhower's prestige and that of the United States than the humiliation he might face by going to Japan.

ASIA IS ONE of the two most important continents in the East-West juggling for the future balance of power, and every move must be given the most careful attention. Many Asian nations have maintained a neutral or unfriendly attitude toward the United States, so it is important to emphasize at every opportunity the friendship of those countries which have been on our side all

This adds more facets to the problem facing the President. If he were to cancel the stop in Japan but make the trip to other countries, it would be obvious that his reason was the opposition of the Socialists and Communists in Tokyo.

But to cancel the entire trip would pass up the opportunity to capitalize on the friendship of those nations for the United States as well as to re-emphasize the President's personal prestige abroad.

THE DECISION to go or not to go is typical of the ticklishness of international relations. It is not a new situation for President Eisenhower. He and every chief executive is accustomed to being on the spot. There are no hard and fast answers. There is no way to know until after the decision has been made whether it was the right one. It is a matter of educated guesswork plus a large amount of personal and political

The remaining factor is that no one but Mr. Eisenhower can make the decision for him. Others can advise him and advice is flowing from all sides. But he must make up his own mind and then accept the responsibility for the course he chooses.

It is clear that whatever decision the President makes, it will not have been an easy

Drastic Surgery For Social Malignancy

The Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision this week that applies specifically to a tiny area of the nation but can have far-reaching effect for the entire

It approved a compact between the states of New York and New Jersey, with the blessing of Congress, which bars ex-felons from the Port of New York either as workers or as union officials

The story of gangsterism on New York's waterfront has become known widely through a variety of media. This publicity on the problem has stirred sympathy for the workers victimized by hoodlums, alarm at gangland influence on the nation's biggest port, concern over criminals' use of the waterfront situation to catapult themselves into positions of leadership not only in the underworld but in the union movement.

REPEATED EFFORTS along conventional lines had proved so ineffective in rooting out the source of the trouble that two states decided on drastic action, manifested in the pact provision for licensing of all workers and the refusal of licenses to any ex-felons who have not been pardoned or approved by state parole authorities.

Later legislation supplemented the compact with a provision that a union representing waterfront workers could not collect dues if any of its officers or agents ever had been convicted of felonies.

Justice Frankfurter, in the court's majority decision, conceded this was pretty drastic.

"But in the view of Congress and the two states involved the situation on the New York waterfront regarding the presence of ex-convicts called for drastic action," he said. "It is not for this court to substitute its judgment for that of Congress and the legislatures of New York and New Jersey regarding the social surgery required by a situation as gangrenous as exposure of the New York waterfront has revealed." This point should give courage to administrators, legislators and civic-minded individuals everywhere who favor drastic social surgery for critical social ailments.

A CRIMINAL conspiracy law for Ohio, for instance. It was defeated by a committee of the state Senate last year, but it will be resubmitted to next year's Legislature.

It may be, as its critics said in 1959, a drastic piece of legislation. But any interested observer knows that the real "brains" behind organized crime in Ohio will not be reached by the wrist-tapping measures now provided by state statutes.

As in federal laws dealing with subversion and sedition, our basic provisions to protect the rights of individuals never were meant to be licenses for destructive forces in our

Secretary of the Interior Fred A. Seaton has injected a fresh note into the current political scene in the simplest of ways. He has come right out and said publicly he would be happy to run for vice president. The primary characteristic of the prelim; inaries to a presidential campaign is the "coy period" in which candidates for the top office act like candidates but deny they are candidates.

The secondary characteristic of the preliminaries is that nobody will admit he wants to be a candidate for vice president. The candidates for the presidential nominations reject suggestions they accept the companion spot because they fear it will compromise their chances for the big prize. Others refuse to admit they might accept the vice presidential nomination because they fear no one will subsequently ask them.

Secretary Seaton, however, is in a position to be candid and so he was when the subject was brought up by a reporter.

He conceded that he had not been asked and conceded that many factors make it unlikely he will be asked. But if he were asked, he said, he would be flattered and happy always safe to talk about the weather, the pundits talk about it continuously. But whereas people never paid much attention to talk about the weather in the old days. they hang on to every syllable in these brave new days, because the talk has an official ring to it.

The weather spielers speak glibly of high pressure cells, cold fronts, relative humidity and whether the barometer is steady, or rising, or falling. They slit their eyes and draw complicated diagrams showing movements going clockwise and counterclockwise. They tell how hot it was today in Airzona and how cold in Montana. They refer to what it is doing in Jacksonville and how things are on the Atlantic Coast. They are encyclopedias of information. And people take them

Herded by Sgt. Roy Rogers, who drives an accompanying vehicle and trailer, the two follow a strict routine, arising at 4 a. m daily and starting their hike at 5.

After a 30-minute break for a second breakfast around 10, they continue walking until mid-afternoon when they pause for lunch. They resume walking until they reach their goal for the day, generally about 8 or 9 p. m.

Sgt. Rogers is the driver, chief cook, advance scout and publicity man on the trip.
